BE AWARE & PROACTIVE

SEASONAL AFFECTIVE DISORDER HAPPENS THIS TIME OF YEAR - LESS DAYLIGHT AND SHORTER DAYS.

BE PROACTIVE AND COMBAT THOSE "WINTER BLUES" BY STAYING ACTIVE, EATING HEALTHY, STAYING SOCIAL, USE LIGHTS TO MIMIC SUN - OR SEEK SUN WHEN IT'S OUT, HAVE FUN AND OPEN UP ABOUT YOUR FEELINGS.

IF YOU CANNOT SHAKE THESE FEELINGS, PLEASE SEEK MEDICAL ATTENTION.

Being Thankful Makes Life Better.....

Stop for a moment and think about every good thing in your life. Even in the really rough moments, there's something good out of it. Life isn't always easy, but we must carry on every single day. If you choose to find the happiness, you'll find that life just won't seems as hard. Be thankful and find that happy! I'm thankful for YOU!!!!

Holiday Display Adventure

Waaaaay back in the days of my childhood.....we would load up in the car with a thermos of hot chocolate and some Christmas candy and drive around looking for/at all the beautiful Christmas lights and decorations! It is a core memory - and, in fact, my mom and I continue that tradition to this day!

Madras Go-'Round would LOVE to help others experience this fun and exciting adventure! Here's how.....If you are decorating for the Christmas holidays and wouldn't mind sharing your Holiday spirit..... send us your address and we will compile a growing list to be published beginning 12/2/2026 thru 12/23/2026. And each week new addresses that come in will be added!

Now, more than ever, we need to remember the simplicity of families spending quality, fun and exciting time together. So.....make a thermos of hot cocoa, lots of Christmas candy, blankets, and load the entire family into the car and make some amazing memories!

Submit your address one of the following ways.

Pen in Hand

Hildy noticed that her husband's hands shook a bit. The fork was unsteady when Bud ate, and when they held hands she felt a tremor. It made her sad, especially since Bud was still so sharp mentally. Oh well, this was just one more thing to add to the list of old age symptoms. She dropped the thought and focused on being thankful they had each other....as well as good minds.

She was also proud (and sometimes annoyed) that Bud was meticulous about putting things back in their rightful places. It saved a lot of frustration in their marriage. He was also quick to remind Hildy to do the same, since she was the more casual of the two. If that trait diminished then she'd know her husband was really slowing down.

Later that week, while Hildy sat in her recliner writing on her lapboard, Bud suddenly got up from his chair and walked over to hers.

"He took my pen right out of my hand," she said, "while I was in the middle of a sentence! He laid down a piece of paper on my lapboard, signed his name, and returned my pen - all without saying a word. I was perplexed. Why use my pen, I wondered. He has a lovely pen of his own, and he always knows exactly where it is. In fact, I'm usually the one borrowing his pen."

Hildy studied Bud for a moment, waiting for him to say something. "Just then he turned around and held up his left hand. It was holding a pen....his favorite one."

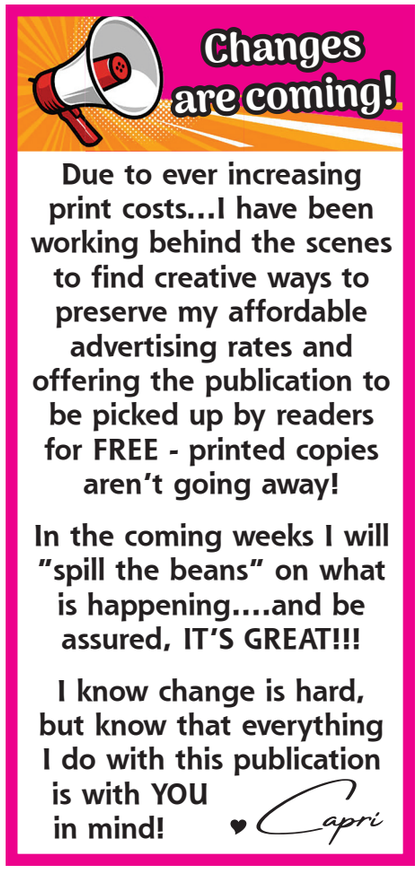

He wrinkled his brow, chuckled aloud, then shook his head from side to side in a curious way. "I supposed you're wondering what I'm up to."

Hildy stifled a smile, "The thought had crossed my mind."

"Well then, I'll tell you," Bud teased. "I got up, picked up my pen to sign this form, and then for the life of me I couldn't find it." He scratched the bald spot on his head. "I hunted around the cushions on the couch, on top and under the end table, and even looked on the floor, but it wasn't anywhere that I could see. So I decided to borrow yours."

Then he looked again at the pen in his hand. "Well, at least I didn't lose my pen!" he said as he walked back to his chair and took up his evening paper.

Historic short stories about Oregon's famous ghost town, Shaniko. Fun & informational "corner". ~ Submitted by Debra Holbrook

Election Day in Shaniko 1920s

Shaniko's polling place was in the second-story council room of the old city hall. Robert Altermatt in his book "Shaniko Remembered" recalls one year his mother was an official and he stood by meeting people that he had only heard of by name. In Shaniko it seemed to always be known who would be elected. One year the folks considered the "outs" planned a winning strategy. "They stayed away from the polls until an hour before closing and then came to the polls with enough voters to elect their candidate." Allie Brazeau who owned a garage and the pool hall would be the new mayor. Robert's mother sent word to Mayor Gavin, who rushed to city hall and declared a voting extension of one hour. Messengers, that included Robert, "were sent out to the good guys, to tell them to come in and vote." The extension was enough. In closing, it is humorous on some level to look at an incident like this, however the same prejudice is still alive and well in Shaniko. For the past 6-7 years, agenda and power rule over law and procedure. I voted for no one running this year but in a blank recorder slot I wrote in a woman who was illegally appointed two years ago and when shown to the council it was illegal, refused to step down. After four months of pressure the majority of the council resigned. No one wants the recorder job because agenda creates too much liability for it. So it will probably remain empty, lacking one branch of the government there. As a 30+ years historian, and past recorder for 18+ years, the "here we go again" looks to continue. When something as important as a city government stops serving the people as a whole it deserves to die on the vine. Thus, my protest.
